Give with your Children!

Now that you've received, consider something nice you can do for someone in need. It might be donating those items to charity or maybe making something for your neighbors. Try visiting a local assisted living facility to hand out cookies, sing songs, or simply visit with the residents. You could also volunteer together at a local shelter or soup kitchen, or hand out sandwiches to the homeless. Giving your kids the opportunity to serve others is one of the best gifts you could ever give! Giving creates a happy feeling not just for the receiver but also for the giver. A recent study found that children are, in fact, happier when they give than when they receive. Sharing and giving are an essential part of social-emotional development, and the holiday season is the perfect opportunity to help your child develop these important skills.
